YWCA job opportunities for women in Los Angeles, other parts of the nation, and in foreign countries were revealed this week with the opening of an area wide recruitment program.

Positions are available to both the mature woman and the young college graduate, points out Miss Violet Van Note, Los Angeles YWCA staff member in charge of the recruitment project.

She added that this was the first time in several years that so many key positions had opened up in the immediate Los Angeles area and urged women who were interested in locating here to apply as soon as possible.

To qualify for a YWCA position, applicants should have a bachelor's degree, and preferably experience working with groups such as camp counseling, campus projects, church groups or other similar projects.

Professional YWCA positions include those in community YWCAs, on college and university campuses and in areas where new YWCA programs are being set up. Needed are directors of teenage programs, young adult program directors, as well as health, physical education and recreation directors.

In speaking of advancement within the YWCA, Miss Van Note said, "The staff member may transfer to a community presenting a greater challenge to her work. She may advance to department head or to executive director. There is a good deal of flexibility too, in whether she will be part of the local or national staff. She can vary her job from community to campus association. In addition, the staff member may embark on a pioneering job in this country or overseas.

Miss Van Note and other recruiters, including Miss June Simmons, program director of the Hollywood YWCA and Mrs. James Strong, YWCA volunteer, will interview candidates at Los Angeles College, Occidental, USC, UCLA, Pepperdine and other colleges during April.

Personal interviews may be arranged by contacting Miss Van Note at the YWCA Hotel, where she is director, 206 West Sixth St.

Dairy Council Presents Film for Teenage Girls

A film, "... and Everything Nice" compiled and edited by the Dairy Council of California has now been made available to youth groups of the area.

The color film, in which non-professional teenage girls are used, was developed to encourage younger teenage girls to think about what they eat and how it can help them reach the goals of immediate importance. Experienced teachers and leaders, working regularly with girls 12 to 15 years of age, were consulted during the making of the film.

The four major ideas presented in the film are: face shapes should dictate hair styles; appropriate use of make-up depends on age as well as the social situation; three meals a day may not provide the necessary nutrients; and calories and exercise can help muscle tone and body weight.

The film and teaching packets are available for youth groups from the Dairy Council of California office at 3421 W. 8th St., Los Angeles.
